Hebrew Bible’s “Interpretation Course”

A short course with Professor Stefan Bosman Ph.D

Professor in Classical Hebrew, Biblical Greek, Aramaic, and Biblical and Jewish Studies at eTeacherBiblical and the Israel Institute of Biblical Studies

When does the course begin? Wednesday, 9th June (followed by 16th, 23rd and 30th June)

At which time are the sessions? 11.00am

How long is each session? 60 minutes

How many sessions are there? Four

What platform is used? Zoom

Cost £20 (for the four sessions)

Join us in this short course to explore a Biblical Interpretation of the Hebrew Bible.

During the four sessions Professor Stefan Bosman will discuss:

- Authorial Intentional Clues: Interpreting the Torah, especially Genesis
- Authorial Intentional Clues: Interpreting the Prophets
- Rabbinic Exegesis and the New Testament
- Interpreting the Hebrew Bible by Paul: 1 Corinthians 10:4, Romans 5:12-21, Galatians 3, Romans 15

The course leader is:

Stefan Bosman has a keen interest in the early Jewish and Christian interpretation of Scripture. He was fortunate to pursue this passion during his MA and PhD studies at, respectively, the Hebrew University and the University of Aberdeen. In his doctoral work, he traced, tradition historically, three interpretative statements of Paul and compared them to similar interpretations of Paul's contemporary Jewish kinsmen. His eventual goal, which was somewhat successful, was to uncover Jewish exegetical techniques employed by Paul.

After having completed his studies, he has become ever more aware that the mechanics of exegesis are just but a part of the whole interpretative process. Still, he believes it is worthwhile to be able to tell whether the groundwork of an eventual interpretation falls in line with precedents found in the Bible itself.